

Microblading is a semi-permanent makeup technique where pigment is manually implanted into the skin with the use of a handheld tool made of microneedles. The artist draws individual hair-like strokes onto the brow to create a more defined look for the client. Say goodbye to your beloved brow pencils, shadows and gels!

The treatment is typically done in two sessions, but there might be a need for a third session depending on the healing process. During the healing phase, it is normal for the brows to fade and scab. The loss of color pigment can be anywhere from 20%-70%. This is a completely normal reaction during the healing process. This is due to the skin forming a protective barrier over the areas where the skin was treated. Applying a thin layer of ointment for the first two weeks after the procedure will help. The pigment takes approximately 4 weeks to appear again. Following post care instructions is important for a successful outcome!

If you are interested in this procedure, please read through the Microblading consent forms and contact Alison to schedule a consultation!
